She is a financial colossus of our time and an effigy of inspiration for women all over the world.

The history of The Nigerian Stock Exchange cannot be complete today without making mention of Dr Ndi Okereke Onyiuke OON who assumed its leadership as Director General/CEO since the year 2000. This made her the first woman to head stock exchange in the world. Since taking over office in 2000, the exchange and the capital market has consistently grown over the years. Outside holding the apex position in this wealth creating industry, she has held a number of reputable positions in the past among which are;

Commercial consultant to African American Institute,
Chair person - African Stock Exchange Association (ASEA),

She is a high flyer and possesses leadership qualities that can be seen in her innovative ideas which has steered the exchange to its current enviable position in Africa. She has contributed to making The Nigerian Stock Exchange (NSE) one of the most stable capital markets in Africa. Among others, she integrated the Automation of the exchange which hitherto acts as a guide to its users and has worked to reduce risk profile of the Nigerian Stock Market. She has nurtured the Nigerian capital market to international standard and has found its place among the global market. The Nigerian Capital Market now provides a level playing field for International investors since 1995 when it was deregulated by its previous regimes. Today, NSE maintains international competitiveness due to its transparency as investors through Central Securities Clearing System (CSCS) now have the opportunity of subscribing to its web site at a fee to view their portfolio directly with the clearing house as a further check on the Stock Brokers activities and their firms. She did not relent in embracing the World Wide Web with its global out reach as demonstrated in her products and policies. The introduction of the All Share Index has given investors the basis for determining the market capitalisation as well as historical data for analysis purposes.

She was bestowed The Professor of Capital Market Studies by University of Nigeria Nsuka.
